Once upon a time not very long ago - a colourful Phoenix chick loved to show its magical flying trick.

Big Bird noticed the excitement and thrill and praised the chick's wonderful skill. This made the chick feel ever so clever. It was so happy to have such fantastic fun playing all day in the blistering sun.

Then Big Bird suggested a secret fireplace – which turned out such a confusing space! When ash covered its favourite feather the Phoenix chick hated playing together.

This was when loneliness entered the world of the chick and fear chased off any flying trick.

The Phoenix chick didn't know what to do; it tried to be brave and aimed to behave. Yet anger seemed to cause constant trouble without ever bursting the loneliness bubble.

One day a Kind Bird noticed the ash.

Believing the chick

Kind Bird said
it was wrong
that Big Bird kept secrets

and chick felt so strong

Chick spoke about the fireplace
there wasn't a rush.

The chick came along
when wise birds declared:

'No bird should ever
feel that scared!

It's time to make life
more secure -

this chick deserves
a soothing cure!

That's when Kind Bird decided that it would be best to build a safe and comfortable nest.

They loved to pop corn, put chocolate in milk,
sometimes they chatted, sometimes they chilled.

They filled the nest with stories and cuddles
and watched how the rain changed muddy old puddles.

I believe you!

It wasn't
your fault!

Grown-ups
are responsible for what they do!

Let's
play
together!

I like how you
...!

One day when chick felt the warmth of the sun,
it decided that swinging on a twig and

perhaps a quick flying trick sounded like fun.
